

STANDING (c) 2008 Glenn Ricci

From where I'm standing You could be a building
That is built upon the ruins Of the wreckage before
From where I'm standing It may be light refracting
But it appears the laws of physics Don't apply to you

And we are all alone now On this street
The others have all voted with their feet
But from where I'm standing I've probably missed something
Like the reason I still find you Standing next to me

I can stand upon the rooftops
I can stand in the gutter
I can stand in the cathedral
I can stand in the desert
But no matter where I stand I want to share the view
Because it's plain to see That I still owe my life to you

From where I'm standing The memory is fading
Of a past that left me mortified To give myself away
From where I'm standing The weather is amazing
And to think I thought I'd never Get to see the light of day

I could stand behind the keyhole
Of the doors of perception
I could stand in the piazza
Of a thousand revelations

But not matter where I stand I want to share the view
Because it's plain to see That I owe my life to you

From where I'm standing You could be a building
That is built upon the ruins Of the wreckage before
